Rabbi's Message

One of the most well known tropes in the Jewish tradition is the oft repeated notion of Zecher Liy'tzi'at Mitzrayim, a remembrance of the Exodus from Egypt. In fact, there is hardly a festival on the Jewish calendar that isn't directly linked with the idea. For us, a people born out of slavery, the Exodus holds particular significance. In the wilderness, at Sinai, we stood at the foot of a mountain and took on the rights and responsibilities associated with nationhood. It is easy to appreciate all of the blessings that this encounter provided, first and foremost the freedom to worship God as we are commanded. But it is also easy to take for granted the responsibilities associated with that freedom. One such responsibility explains the association of Shabbat and festival times with the idea of Zecher Liy'tzi'at Mitzrayim, a remembrance of the Exodus from Egypt. Perhaps the most important responsibility we have is to remember; we must never forget what it feels like to be enslaved, lest we return to a state of subjugation.

At Sinai, we accepted the Torah, and bound to its laws, we became one. We were free, free to follow its teachings, to worship our God. Thousands of years later we remain the guarantors of that freedom we accepted so long ago. As we prepare to enter into a New Year, we seek to affirm this freedom. Yet unlike so many other appointed times on our calendar, Rosh HaShanah does not initially call to mind a remembrance of the Exodus from Egypt. Rather, at this time of year, we are charged to remember the sound of the Shofar. Though our Exodus from Egypt is mentioned in the festival Kiddush, our thoughts tend to stray from slavery and freedom at this season.

President's Message

It is 5775. So what? Besides being a palindrome, what does the year 5775 mean? Is it just another year in the Hebrew calendar where we say "Whew, we survived"? We have said the prayers for a sweet, healthy year; asked to be inscribed in the Book of Life; fasted

(or not), said or sent greetings to our temple family and community; will build, celebrate, and dwell symbolically in the sukkah; will unroll the Torah and start again with Genesis; and eventually sigh and fall back into our daily routines of 2014. We don't have to remember to write 5775 on checks nor does 5775 come up in daily conversations. So...?

The fact that 5775 can be divided by 7 makes it Shmita, a year of rest. While historically this applies to letting land lie fallow for a year and forgiving all individual debts in Israel, it could also have meaning for the 98% in Israel who are not farmers and for us who do not live in Israel.

There is a proposed program in Israel to help provide debt-relief for 5000 families. Private philanthropies worldwide are chipping in for this. But what about here? There are families in our community (at least 30) who need financial and material help. Is this an opportunity to make it a shmita year for them?

How do we extend the idea of shmita beyond finance and agriculture? We are a people on the run and shmita tells us to stop—not for day, but for a year! Shabbat is supposed to be a time to stop for 25 hours, but for many it really is never that. Could we put ourselves on the side this year and focus on social, environmental, and economic values?

Rabbi Yosef Zvi Rimon, founding director of the Halacha Education Center based in Alon Shvut, said "It's a year when you have time to listen to your soul, to yourself, when you can be attached to your family—to be with them, to have time with them. A year to listen to nature." I would add the word "community" to his words. There will be many opportunities to listen to, be attached to, be with, and have time with the BYBS community. Let's think about the many ways we can have a shmita year.

So how is this central Jewish idea connected to the New Year? Rabbi, professor, and author, Art Green, teaches that we are still enslaved. It may not be as a people, or in the traditional sense of the word. But each of us has something that controls us, something that holds us back, someplace in our life where we are stuck. At this time of turning, when we are tasked with the act of Cheshbon HaNefesh, an accounting of our souls, perhaps we also need to ask ourselves: What is MY Egypt? And, in turn, how do I come out of it? The great Hassidic master Rabbi Nachman of Bretzlav taught, when leaving Egypt, do not stop to ask what will I do out there. If you do, you'll never get out. Fear of the unknown can be paralyzing. And yet, so many years ago, our ancestors took a chance, and, believing in Moses and his abilities, went forth from Egypt into the literal and metaphorical wilderness. Maybe the task of remembering the Exodus from Egypt is so central to our identity as Jews because without it, we might also forget our people's courage in taking those first few steps into community, and into freedom.

This year, as we prepare to enter into a New Year, let us ask ourselves: what is My personal Egypt? What are those things that are enslaving me? And, recalling Israel's bravery, be inspired to move, ourselves, from the narrow places which constrict us, and into the freedom of fulfillment and the realization of the best selves we can be.

Shanah Tovah U'metukah!

A happy, healthy, and fulfilling 5775 to you all!

Rabbi Harari Installation

November 1, 2014

10:00 am

The installation of Rabbi Harari will be a ceremony that takes place in the context of Shabbat services. It formally welcomes her and establishes her as rabbi of our two communities. She will promise to serve the BYBS/CAE community to the best of her ability and has chosen one of her mentors, Rabbi Richard Sarason, PHD, to officiate at the ceremony.

Dr. Richard Sarason is Professor of Rabbinic Literature and Thought and the Associate Editor of the Hebrew Union College Annual. He was ordained at HUC-JIR. Before joining the College-Institute faculty, he taught Religious Studies at Brown University where he earned a Ph.D. His specialties are classical rabbinic literature, history of Judaism in late antiquity, Midrash and Liturgy. Ordained HUC-JIR (1974), Dr. Sarason received his Ph.D. from Brown University in 1977. He is a noted lecturer with many published credentials to his credit.

Personal note—I know klutz does not begin with a c, but after I stepped in a hole and fractured my ankle I quickly realized what immobility, even for what I hope is a short period of time, can mean. You can't do it alone, and I thank all those (especially Jerry) who have stepped up, schlepped, offered assistance, pushed, opened doors, or offered words of encouragement. Many of those to whom the thanks go live with mobility and health issues far more serious than mine. It does fortify what this community can be and is. Thanks.

Sisterhood News

Sisterhood will have a busy October. We are sponsoring our annual Break-the Fast. Thank you to Eila Koltun and everyone involved. On October 19, author Maggie Anton will speak at our opening luncheon. The cost is $15 for lunch and the discussion or just $5 if you can only come for the discussion. Check the flyer in the bulletin.

On October 22, six of us will be on the road to Minneapolis for the WRJ Midwest Convention. Carole Fefferman will be leading a discussion about small congregations. Judy Lohr Safcik will be installed as chair of the Rhoda Hauptman Memorial Award. Gayle Weil and Penny Shnay will be installed on the executive board as Area Directors for Greater Illinois/Northwest Indiana. Our small congregation will be well represented at the convention.

Carole Fefferman and Susan Bayer worked on the historical display case in the front hall. It has been rearranged and we are looking to preserve two texts that have been on display.

Come see the new and improved Sisterhood "Gift Boutique" in our lobby, all set up for your early Chanukah shopping. We have a big selection of toys and games for the children, serving plates and bowls for the hostess with the mostest, beautiful mezuzahs and menorahs for those who are just getting started, boxes of Chanukah candles, gifts for baby, and a large selection of "tribute cards" at reduced prices. We will be having our big Chanukah sale on Sunday, November 16th, but you don't have to wait until then to shop. Contact us at giftshop@bybs.org and we will be happy to do our best to accommodate you.

A big thank you to Elena Morone, Harlene and Sara Friedman for the great job they did on the Gift Shop.
